GET RICH.

That is a piece of advice very much like the doctor's, when he advised the poor man to take a 25c; cherries, 25c; peaches, 15c; Consea voyage; or the poor woman cord grapevines, 2 years old, 3c each; eurrants, 5c; gooseberries, industry, to take good nourishing food and a glass of port wine. We don't need to be told to get rich but we do need to be told how to do it.

There are many ways to get money. Speculation is one way. You can buy stocks, bonds, shares, etc., but all this requires capital to start with, and and 31st. you have none, we will suppose. Then you must begin saving money, but this only shifts the shoe that pinches to the other foot, How to save money is nearly as great a problem as how to get rich. A Big Saloon.

About one of the biggest salcons in this country is the one at the soldiers' home at Dayton, operated with the sanction of the government for the benefit of the old soldiers who are members of that institution. It are members of that institution. It who are members of that institution. It has eight bartenders on duty constantly from 7 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. No beer is sold except to inmates and persons employed in the home, and the average daily consumption is twenty-three barrels, or about 6,000 glasses. For this the inmates pay five cents a glass, so that this mammoth saloon collects from the old soldiers $345 every day. The profit exclusive of wages and breakage of glasses is estimated at 50 per cent. and this goes into the post fund—that is to say for the payment of the band, dramatic entertainment and other band, dramatic entertainment and other amusements. As a saloon, keeper Uncle Sam certainly beats the world and it is certainly not to our credit that such a place as the mammoth soldiers' home saloon is allowed to exist to swallow up the pension money of the old veterans living there.

Rolling Steel Tubes.

President Morton of the celebrated Stevens institute speaks of the Mannersmann process of rolling steel tubes as one of the most striking discoveries of mechanics of late years. In this process a hot billet is passed in between two conical rolls, set with their axes at a small angle to each other. It comes out the other end a steel tube, with uniform walls, and no mandril or anything else is needed to make the central opening. In other words, it seems as if a hole were taken to serve as a mandril and the steel were rolled on it into pipe, Tubes are made in this way from the size of a knitting needle up to the diameter of 10 inches. The theory of the method is that if a uniform bar of steel be stretched lengthwise it will gradually thin down by the yielding surface layers until it breaks, but if, however, the bar be much harder on its surface than on its interior the inside parts will give way first, developing a cavity along the axis of the bor. MY LORD ELEPHANT.

When I was stationed up in the hill country, some 20 years ago, I used to be passionately fond of hunting. I had not been out from England long, and the novelty of following big game had not yet lost its charms. My duties did not occupy a great deal of my time, and any one. With a couple of natives and my old "Henry," I would set forth on Mowcha, my elephant. Mowcha was an exceptionally fine specimen of his race, endowed with all its virtues and but few of its faults. He was strong, patient, sagacious and devoted to his master. He had never been used as a working elephant, but only for the purpose of the chase. You should have seen his unwieldy bulk making its way noiselessly through the thick jungle grass, his great feet lifted and put down with the utmost caution, his flexible trunk darting in all directions to scent the game, and his small eyes gleaming with excitement. He seemed to know instinctively the moment to fire, and then he would not move a muscle. You know it requires no small amount of nerve to stand perfectly still with a Bengal devil in a striped skin charging at one, and too often it happens that your well directed shot is spoiled by your elephant's speedy retreat. The natives deemed Moweha superhuman, on account of his intelligence and strength, and his mahout always called him my lord the elephant and treated him with the greatest respect. "But silk like this has been selling at $1.

'But my dear madam' said he 'a peculiar disease has attacked the silk worms and they are all dying off and the price of silk is advancing rapidly and it won't be long till silk will be $2 per yard."

'The woman looked scared and snapped on the bargain believing that it would probably be the last silk she would ever buy at that price.

You know the Hindoo belief—that the souls of one's ancestors have to reside for a period after death in the bodies of animals till they have atoned for their shortcomings on earth, and, less they might unwittingly treat some of their grandfathers or great-grandfathers with disrespect, which would be a criminal mches

About three or four years later I was invited to spend the Christmas holidays with an English friend who was giving house party at his place farther up in the hills. I easily obtained leave and started with but one servant, Ramon. He had formerly been Mowcha's mahout, but after that brute's uncanny disappearance he had attached himself to me and proved to be a very handy fellow. We were mounted on hardy little ponies, and the first day made about 50 miles, spending the night at the hut of one of the forest rangers who are stationed by the government as a guard along the edges of large and important

The next day we plunged into the forstartled by hearing a fearful, thunderous roaring, as of some monster in its death agony. At that distance I did not recognize it as the voice of any wild animal I was acquainted with and turned to Ramon for an explanation. His dark skin was bleached to ashen gray. "It's a herd of elephants," he exclaimed, "and they are sounding their most rapidity. I did the same, my progress being hindered, however, by my heavy riding boots. We had no time to secure our ponies, and the frightened animals, as soon as they were released, sprang nimbly through the thickets and disappeared, and with them, of course, vanished our only means of escape from the forest, even though the elephants should pass us by unharmed. We reached our position of safety none too soon. I could see the heavy forest branches shaking violently, and soon a huge gray mass broke through, shambling along at a remarkable rate of speed, not 20 yards from us and aming with vicious rage. "It's a rogue elephant, sahib," said "They are chasing bim from

Such indeed seemed to be the case, for 100 yards behind him came another enormous figure, which was headed straight for our place of refuge. As by lightnipg flash I saw the horrible death that menaced us. I already felt myself falling to the ground, in a second more to be trampled to death under those immense feet. But at that instant I heard Ramon call out boldly, "Let-rah gaj" (lie down). The great beast paused. 'Let-rah, let-rah,'' again he cried, and to my astonishment the creature obediently went down upon its knees.

Ramon quickly descended, calling me to follow. Where a black leads, a white nan does not lag behind, and down I I did not understand how the agical transformation had been effected, but as I turned and caught sight of the animal I comprehended it all. Around the great foreleg was a chain, time and called out the word of command, hoping that it would be obeyed. He was not disappointed, for, although ugly red light and the trunk waved mutinously in the air, the great creature had not forgotten his former train ing. We approached him cautiously at first, but presently Ramon rushed fearlessly up to the brute and petted him effusively, calling him by every name of endearment. "Ah, 'tis thou, my lord the elephant! 'Tis thou, leader of the herd, wiser than the wise men of the temple, beautiful as a lotus bud, strong as the winds of heaven! O great Lord Mowcha! Thy slave salutes thee!" Truly enough it was our old Mowcha. ho, in spite of lapse of time and change of place, had not forgotten his old masers and the familiar word of command. All this had happened within a few moments. The grat herd was still crashing through the forest all around us. trumpeting with rage and shaking the ground in their fury. Should one of them chance to come near enough to see us our lives would not be worth a farthing. Mowcha seemed to understand the situation perfectly, for, his with his strong trunk and set him upon rides. He grasped me with the same ease and placed me beside him. Then he rose and started off at a good pace in the rest of his fellows, and soon their screams and thunderings had died away. We wondered where my lord the elephant intended to convey us, whether to his native jungles or to the post again. Ramon tried to guide him, but found it impossible without the help of the usual ankus, or goad, so we confined our efforts to keeping our balance and staying on his back, a somewhat difficult task without the aid of harness or howdah.

Briefly told, his strong, steady pace never failed for over ten hours, until we entered the post again. Our approach had been descried from afar. and every living soul had turned out to view the spectacle. When it was perceived that it was Mowcha, dear old Mowcha, who was bringing us back in safety, a hearty cheer broke from all throats, a cheer for my lord the eleest itself. Toward midday we were | phant. The children clapped their hands and shricked with joy, and even the soldiers shared the general enthusiasm.

We gave my lord the elephant a feast such as never elephant had had before, but he did not seem to enjoy the dainties spread before him so much as the moment when the howdah was placed on his back, and he was led forth, surrounded by the children, whom he once more bore solemnly around the post. For two days he remained with us and was the object of attention and love. Then he became restless, and we fancied he again longed for his forest home. So the cruel chain was stricken off his huge foot, and my lord the elephant, with roses and branches wreathed around his great neck and hanging from his stubby tusks, was led forth and given his liberty. - Our Animal Friends.
